the holistic
dimension
of aesthetics

Tsp and self-perception

The face is the part of the body that shows more than any other our disharmony, the signs of ageing, and the wrong behaviour that conditions our existence. Restoring the “language” of forms means re-establishing a balance with our “biotype” in a holistic vision of beauty. This has been the main direction of my research in the field of professional aesthetics for many years. So it is not only TSP, but also my “natural method” to free the face from the mistakes of this language and to restore the natural organicity of the face with the soul, as opposed to the traditional “corrective” technique which tends to mask these defects with makeup. This is why I prefer not to define my work as make up treatment, but as “make in”, which we can define as an experience of the self, where re-establishing the relationship between the gaze and the mind helps to improve our feeling of well-being through an understanding of ourselves and the world around us.
